PART I.

A very full and detailed Index to this and the succeeding Part, will be given at the end of the Volume.

PREFACE.

Thomas, Earl of Arundel[a], only son of Philip, Earl of Arundel, by Anne, daughter of Thomas, Lord Dacre of Gillesland, and grandson of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, attainted in 1572, was one of our earliest, most zealous, and most munificent patrons of Literature and the Fine Arts.

Though his influence and fortune were greatly curtailed by the political conduct of his ancestors and the embarassments in which, in consequence of it, his own estate was involved, he succeeded in extending to men of learning and taste an encouragement, which was not only then unprecedented, but still remains without an equal example. He was one of the first to stimulate, by his countenance, the rising genius of Inigo Jones; he brought Hollar from Prague, and established him in London; Francis Junius and Oughtred were received into his family; Cotton, Spelman, Camden, and Selden were among his intimate friends; and his house was for many years the welcome resort of all who had any pretensions to excellence in literature, science, or art. In the indulgence of his favourite pursuits, he amassed an unrivalled collection of books, manuscripts, coins, gems, paintings, statues, and antiquities; and of the princely scale of expenditure which he devoted to these objects, some idea may be formed from the fact, that he gave no less than ten thousand pounds at one time for the medals, intaglios and other valuable curiosities of Daniel Nice[b]. By the force of his example, and the introduction of these abundant stores of learning and exquisite models of fine art, he gave a new impulse and direction to the national taste, and may justly be thought to have conferred more important and permanent advantages upon his country, than any other individual of his time.

Lord Arundel's Collections were, after his death, partially dispersed, owing in some measure to the turbulent events which immediately succeeded in the State, but more, perhaps, to the discord which prevailed in the Howard family, and the limited, if not distressed, circumstances of the Countess, his widow. Many important portions, however, still continue, to a great degree, entire. His ancient inscriptions, and among them that singular and invaluable monument of Grecian history, the Parian Chronicle, were given by his grandson, Henry Howard, afterwards Duke of Norfolk, to the University of Oxford. A part of his statues and bas-reliefs became the property of William, first Lord Lempster, and was presented by the widow of his son, the Earl of Pomfret, to the same University; and another considerable part is to be found among the antiquities of the Earl of Pembroke, at Wilton. His gems constitute the principal ornament of the cabinet of the dukes of Marlborough. His printed books were presented in 1681, by Mr.

[a] He was born July 7th, 1592, and died at Padua, Oct. 4th, 1646. For the particulars of his life and character, see Lord Clarendon's Rebellion, Vol. I. p. 98, ed. Oxford, 1826; Sir Edw. Walker's Hist. Discourses, p. 209; Tierney's History and Antiquities of the Castle and Town of Arundel, p. 414.

Henry Howard, to the Royal Society, and his manuscripts[a] shared between that Society and the College of Arms[b].

Of the Manuscripts, which came into the possession of the Royal Society, those in the Hebrew and Oriental languages are still retained at Somerset House; the others, with the exception of a chartulary of some lands of the Howard family[c], which was returned by the Society to the present Duke of Norfolk, were transferred to the British Museum, in consequence of an arrangement made by the Trustees in 1831.

By the transfer thus accomplished, the Public have now the full benefit of this part of Lord Arundel's Collections, which, though it contains little more than five hundred volumes, offers several of unusual interest and value in almost every branch of learning.

It is singularly rich in the materials for the history of our own country and language. Among the Mss. of early British historians, are no less than seven copies of the Historia Britonum, by Geoffry of Monmouth, chiefly of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries[d]; two copies of the Historiæ Rerum Anglicarum, by Henry of Huntingdon[e]; the Polychronicon of Ralph Higden[f]; two copies of the Annals of Roger de Hoveden[g]; a recent but unique Ms. of Ingulph's Descriptio Abbatiæ Croylandensis[h]; two copies of William of Malmesbury's books De Gestis Regum Anglorum[i], and copies of his Historiæ Novellæ[k] and books De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum[l]; the Flores Historiarum attributed to Matthew of Westminster[m]; the Historia Regum Britannorum, and Gesta Pontificum Angliæ, by John Pike[n]; two copies of the Annals of Nicholas Trivet, in Latin[o], and a copy of the general Chronicle, from the Creation to the 7 Edw. II., which he wrote in French[p]; the Tracts of Alred, Abbot of Rivaulx, intitled, De Vita et Moribus quorundam Regum Angliæ[q], and De Vita S. Edwardi Regis et Confessoris[r]; and a valuable Ms. in three folio volumes, of the Chronicles of Jehan Froissart[s]. To this class may be appended, a fine copy of the Life of Dunstan by Osbern[t]; an unique Ms. of the Life of Thomas à Becket, by Edmund Grim[u]; two copies of the life of the same Prelate, commonly known as the Quadrilogus[x]; a volume of his Epistles[y]; and a valuable Ms. of the Epistles of Peter of Blois[z]. It may be proper also to notice a volume of letters and other documents relative to the Divorce of Henry VIII. from Katharine of Arragon, some of which are original[aa].

There will be found likewise a fine Ms., containing an Abridgement of a large part of Domesday Book, written in the twelfth century, and formerly belonging to the Abbey of Margan[bb]; the Topographia Hiberniæ, by Giraldus Cambrensis[cc]; a book of the Accounts of the Treasurer of the King's Household, from the 29 to the 33 Hen. VIII.[dd]; and a book of the Accounts of the Tellers of the Exchequer, for the first year of James I[ee].

The Collection is also rich in that important class of Mss., the chartularies and registers of our ancient monastic institutions. It possesses Chartularies of the Abbey of St. Albans[ff]; of the Hospital without the Southgate, at Bury St. Edmunds[gg]; of the Monastery of St. John, at Colchester[hh];

[a] In the interval from Lord Arundel's death, some of the Mss. left by him appear to have been separated from the Collection, and some few volumes to have been added to it. For instance, the once splendid copy of Genesis in the Cottonian Library, Otho, B. VI., one of the oldest Greek Mss. known, was given by the Countess of Arundel to her second son, Lord Stafford. Among the Mss. added was the fine Psalter, No. 157, which was purchased for Mr. Henry Howard in 1658. See Tierney, p. 502, and Arund. Ms. 157, fol. 1.

[b] An accurate Catalogue of this part of the Mss. was drawn up in 1829 by Mr. W. H. Black, at the desire of a member of the College, and a limited number of copies were printed for private circulation, under the title, "Catalogue of the Arundel Mss. in the Library of the College of Arms."

and of the Abbeys of Sibton[a] and Tinterne[b]; and Registers, or Lieger Books, of the Monasteries of St. Austin[c] and Christ Church[d], Canterbury; of the Convent of St. Mary and St. Margaret, at Dartford[e]; of the Abbey of Glastonbury[f]; and of that of Newenham, in Devonshire[g]. To these may be added, though of a different nature, a curious volume of the Rules and Constitutions of the Nuns of Sion, near Isleworth[h].

The materials for the illustration of the origin and progress of the English language, are not less ample. Under this head there occur, a splendid Ms. of the Psalter, in Latin, with an interlineary gloss in Saxon, written about the year 1100[i]; a Latin Psalter, supposed by Mr. Humphrey Wanley to be of the time of Cnute, followed by numerous prayers having an interlineary Saxon translation[k]; an extremely curious volume, intitled, Ayenbyte of Inwyt, composed in 1340, by a monk of Canterbury, in the Kentish dialect of that period[l]; a copy, in two volumes, of the English Translation of the Bible usually ascribed to John Wycliffe[m]; the Harmony of the Gospels by Clement of Lanthony, together with the Catholic Epistles, in an English translation likewise commonly considered to be Wycliffe's[n].

Of early English Poetry we have, the Life of St. Katharine, by John Capgrave, with some other pieces of the same age bound with it[o]; two copies of the poem of Thomas Occleve, intitled De Regimine Principum[p]; the book called Secretum Secretorum, versified partly by John Lydgate and completed by Benedict Burgh[q]; Lydgate's poems on the Siege of Troy[r], and on the Siege of Thebes[s]; a volume containing Ypotys, Guy Earl of Warwick and Deacon Alcuin, and the Seven Wise Masters[t]; another containing several religious legends, the Life of St. Katharine, by Capgrave, and the Life of the Virgin, by Lydgate[u]; a Bestiarium and some other pieces, of no great extent, but exceedingly curious, in the language of the thirteenth century[x]; Osbern Bokenam's Lives of the Saints, an unique Ms. written in 1447[y]; a third copy of Capgrave's Life of St. Katharine, with a poem in Praise of the Mass[z]; and some very early and interesting Translations of Hymns[aa]; nor should there pass unnoticed a volume containing numerous pieces of Scottish poetry, chiefly of the latter part of the fifteenth century[bb].

The Mss. which illustrate the language of France in the twelfth and three succeeding centuries, are of considerable value. The most remarkable are, a Psalter with an interlineary gloss in French, of a date probably anterior to the year 1200; and in the same Ms. Philippe de Thaun's Livre des Creatures, and a small fragment of the romance of Alexander[cc]; a translation of Turpin's Exploits of Charlemagne by Willem de Briane[dd]; a sort of French and English Vocabulary, written by Walter de Biblesworthe before the 32 Edw. I.[ee]; a volume of the thirteenth century, in which are, a poem upon the Passion of our Saviour, Le Manuel de Peche, usually ascribed to Grosteste, a poem upon the Love of God to Man, a translation of Edmund Riche's Speculum Ecclesiæ, and the Disputation between the Body and Soul, besides some other pieces both in prose and verse[ff]; a few Early Poems in the Ms. No. 292 already noticed; and several very curious Hymns and Verses[gg].

In general chronicles and histories of foreign states, the Collection comprises the works of Eusebius, Jerome, Sigisbert[hh], Otto[ii], Frecholf[kk], and Bernard Guido[ll]; Eginhard's Life of Charlemagne, and his Annals from the year 741 to 829[mm]; the History of Charlemagne by an anonymous monk of Saint Galles[a]; the Gesta Francorum by an author of the time of Theodoric II., and a fragment of an anonymous History of Pipin Junior[b]; a Supplement to the Chronicle of William de Nangis, by a monk of St. Denys[c]; the History of the Dukes of Normandy by William of Jumieges[d]; a very early Ms. of the Chronicle of Regino[e]; and five or six copies of the Chronicle of Martinus Polonus and its continuators[f].

Of the Mss. of classical authors, several deserve remark; among them, a very early and handsomely written volume of the Natural History of Pliny[g]; a fine copy of Vitruvius[h]; Mss. of Horace, and of the commentary of Helenius Acro[i]; of Plautus[k], Virgil[l], Terence[m], Lucan[n], Statius[o], Martial[p]; the Tragedies of Seneca[q]; Suetonius[r], Justin[s], Valerius Maximus[t], Pomponius Mela[u], and Sextus Ruffus[x]; and several of the works of Cicero[y]. In Greek there are, a Ms. of Hesiod[z]; another of Thucydides[aa]; two copies of three plays of Euripides[bb]; small portions of the writings of Lucian and Plutarch[cc]; the Elements of Euclid[dd]; Hephæstio with Scholia[ee]; Epistles of Libanius, Synesius, Marcus Brutus, and Lysis[ff]; the Epistles of Phalaris[gg]; a copy of Diogenes Laertius[hh]; the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius[ii]; and some of the Rhetorical pieces of Hermogenes and Aphthonius[kk].

The Greek part of the Collection contains also, a valuable copy of the Gospels of the tenth century[ll]; an Evangeliary written in Uncial characters[mm], probably of the ninth century; and another Evangeliary of the thirteenth[nn]; Homilies of Chrysostom[oo] and Basil[pp]; Orations of Gregory Nazianzene[qq]; the Commentaries of Theophylact[rr]; some valuable Mss. on Canon and Civil Law[ss]; the poetical Chronicle of Constantine Manasses[tt]; and a curious History of the affairs of Cyprus between the years 1456 and 1474, written in barbarous Greek, probably the dialect of that island[uu].

Among the more remarkable Mss. may also be accounted, two extremely interesting volumes, containing a large collection of Letters and Orations by the most distinguished scholars of Italy immediately after the restoration of learning[xx]; several ancient Mss. of Lives of Saints and Martyrs[yy]; and others containing Hymns and Odes[zz], many of them curious specimens of the Latin poetry of the middle ages; an autograph Ms. of Lionardo da Vinci[aaa], another of Melancthon[bbb], and a book of Latin and Greek exercises in the handwriting of Edward the Sixth[ccc].

One of the most striking features of the Collection still remains to be noticed, in a considerable number of volumes on the subject of Jurisprudence[ddd]. They consist of copies of the Digests and Codex of Justinian; the Decretum of Gratian; and the Decretals of Gregory IX. and Boniface VIII.; with numerous glosses, commentaries, dissertations, and discourses upon these several texts; summaries, abridgements, and dictionaries of law; collections of decisions, cases, and opinions, and various other books of a similar nature, forming what was probably considered, in the middle of the fifteenth century, a complete library of canon and civil law.

The Arundelian Mss. were collected from various sources, many of which it is now impossible to ascertain. Some of the volumes were probably inherited by Lord Arundel from his ancestors; some were presented to him by his relatives and friends; others purchased by the numerous agents he employed to collect pictures, statues, antiquities, and similar objects of curiosity in different parts of Europe. But the largest portion of the Mss. described in the following Catalogue was bought, together with an extensive collection of printed books, by the Earl himself, when at Nuremberg in the year 1636. These had been the property of Bilibaldus Pirckheymer, one of the most eminent scholars and critics of Germany in the earlier part of the sixteenth century. Pirckheymer, it has been generally supposed, obtained a great part of his library out of that at Breda, which belonged to Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary; it has not, however, been possible to trace with certainty any one of the Mss. here described to the collection of that Sovereign.

The present Catalogue[a] has been formed upon a plan similar in its general outlines to that of the other catalogues of the Museum Mss., which have been published during the present century. Some improvements, however, have been introduced. Great pains have been taken to discover the true authors of the anonymous and pseudonymous pieces. If a Ms. has been printed, this has been generally noted, except in instances where the reader might be reasonably supposed to be acquainted with the fact, or where, owing to the deficiencies in the Museum Library, it would not have been easy to ascertain it. Of unpublished Mss., or those which have been believed to be so, or to differ from the printed editions, the commencement has been given and not unfrequently the termination; and in like manner the commencement and conclusion of such Mss. as are fragments only, have been carefully marked, wherever they seemed to be of sufficient importance to deserve it. The names of the scribes, when they could be discovered, have been mentioned, and the subscriptions and colophons frequently transcribed at length, if in any way curious.

The age of the Ms. has been stated precisely, wherever the writer has left a notice of the date of its completion. In other cases, a conjecture has been formed of the age from those evidences, which the character of the writing or the contents of the volume supplied. Such conjecture may be generally relied upon, if the Ms. has been written at a period subsequent to the eleventh century. With regard to the more ancient Mss., the variations in the manner of execution do not afford the same facilities of arriving with any degree of certainty at their age; and the conjectural dates of an earlier period assigned in the following Catalogue, are therefore not to be received without some hesitation.

With a view of circulating more widely a knowledge of the handwriting, by which Mss. of different ages are characterised, fac-similes have been made of short extracts from some of the more ancient or otherwise remarkable volumes; and to these have been added engravings of a few of the ornaments and illuminations from those which are most splendid and costly. These last will be found to exhibit curious traces of the progress made in the arts of design and painting, and may afford suggestions as to the principles of beauty in grotesque ornaments and in contrasts and combinations of colour, not altogether useless to those who are engaged in several branches of our arts and manufactures.

The first fac-simile is taken from a volume of decrees of Ecclesiastical Councils[b]; the second from a Ms. of the books of Job, Ezra, and Nehemiah, in the Vulgate version[c]; these two Mss. are [a] The Royal Society, almost immediately upon the receipt of the books and Mss. from Mr. Henry Howard, directed a Catalogue of them to be drawn up. This was done by Mr. William Perry, a Fellow of the Society, and was printed, with the addition of some other presents, in a quarto volume in 1681. The Catalogue of the Mss., though, so far as it extends, tolerably accurate, is extremely concise, and merely gives the titles of the principal pieces in each volume. A fuller Catalogue was compiled by Mr. Dryander, and remains in Ms. in the Library of the Royal Society. This, however, is also very imperfect in its details, and is at the same time so incorrect, as to have been found of no use whatever in preparing the descriptions now given.

[b] No. 393, arts. 1—7. The words engraved are "INCIPIUNT REGULAE EXPOSITAE APUT ANTIOCHIAM NUMERO XXV DE HIS QUI CONTRARIA GERUNT HIS, QUE REGULARITER DE PASCHA STATUTA SUNT IN NICENO CONCILIO. Omnes qui ausi fuerint dissolvere definitionem sancti et magni."

not later than the tenth century, and may probably be earlier. The third specimen is a passage in a volume of medical tracts, not less singular and barbarous in its language and orthography than in its penmanship[a]; Mr. Wanley appears to have thought it of the eighth or ninth century.

In the second plate, the first two fac-similes are from Mss. apparently of the ninth or tenth century, the one, a commentary, by Prosper Aquitanus, upon the Psalms[b], the other, the exposition of Bede upon Ezra and Nehemiah[c]; the third is from a beautifully written volume of tracts ascribed to Athanasius[d]; the fourth from the Gesta Regum Francorum before mentioned[e]; both of the tenth, or at the latest, eleventh century. The next extract is from an early volume of theological excerpts or compilations[f], of the precise age of which it is not easy to judge. The sixth fac-simile is of a passage in the Chronicle of Regino[g]; apparently of the tenth century. The next seems of nearly the same date, taken from a volume of the Commentaries of Origen on Jeremiah and the Canticles[h]. The two remaining fac-similes are from Mss. probably of the tenth or eleventh century, the first containing several curious and valuable tracts on music[i], the other fragments of the Origines of Isidorus Hispalensis[k], written apparently by Spaniards, who have severally subscribed their names on the concluding leaves of the fasciculi, which they completed.

The fac-simile at the head of the third plate is from a fly-leaf inserted before a fine Ms. of Sallust; the leaf contains part of an encyclic letter of Amandus, the first of that name, who was Bishop of Vigilia in Apulia[l]; he was elected about 1153, and the writing is probably of the same century. The succeeding fac-simile is from a tract upon Arithmetic[m], of the twelfth century; the extract contains some singular abbreviations of terms used in computation. The lines at the side are from the Phænomena of Aratus[n], copied from a Ms., remarkable as being one of the earliest in the Collection written on paper, probably of the former part of the thirteenth century. The extract below is from the Bestiarium[a] of the same century already noticed. The next is from a volume of Irish Mss. of various ages[b]; the date 1214, given in the extract, claims to be that of this part of the volume. The fac-simile with a large illuminated capital is from a handsome Ms. of the Elements of Euclid[c], probably of the earlier part of the fourteenth century. The last passage is from the Ms. before mentioned[d], written in the Kentish dialect in the year 1340.

The fourth plate exhibits copies of two succeeding pages at the commencement of the valuable Psalter, with a Saxon gloss[e]. The events, and the names of bishops, recorded in the last two articles, enable us to assign the Ms., with little doubt, to the year 1099. The volume contains another representation of the crucifixion, inserted after a long exposition on the fiftieth Psalm, Miserere mei, Deus; and the fifty-first Psalm, and likewise the one hundred and first, commence on a page ornamented in the same style with that engraved.

The first engraving in the fifth plate is from the Natural History of Pliny[f], of the twelfth century; the next from the Life of St. Dunstan[g], of the same age; the last from the ancient Psalter[h], supposed by Mr. Wanley to be written in the reign of Cnute.

The succeeding plate is a fac-simile of a page in the most splendid Ms. in the Collection, and perhaps, of its age, in the National Library[i]. The kalendar, with which it commences, does not contain any thing worthy of remark, except two notes, which recording the care taken by the possessor, Robert de Lyle, in 1339, to secure the preservation of the volume, furnish a proof of the high value then set upon it. The kalendar is followed by the sphere of Archbishop Peckham, and this by three illuminated pages, of which the first is given in the engraving. The compartments severally represent the Nativity, the Annunciation to the Shepherds, the Circumcision, the Visit of the Magi, the Presentation in the Temple, and the Flight into Egypt. The pages immediately succeeding are very similar. They exhibit, in their twelve compartments, the Murder of the Innocents, the Miracle at Cana, the Raising of Lazarus, the Triumphant Entry into Jerusalem, the Last Supper, the Betrayal, the Examination before Herod, the Mocking, the Examination before Pilate, the Buffeting, the Scourging, and the Bearing of the Cross. These pages are followed by the Lignum Vitæ of Bonaventura, and two other pieces of a like kind. Then occurs the illumination given at the head of Plate 7, representing three kings, and the spectres of three others [a]; both in drawing and colouring, this is of the best style of the period. The Ms. comprises also portraitures by the same hand and in the same manner, of the Saviour seated upon a Tomb; the Virgin and Child; the Crucifixion; the Descent into Hell; the Taking Down from the Cross; the Burial; the Commission to the Soldiers to guard the Sepulchre; the Resurrection; the Visit of the Women; the Appearance to Mary Magdalene, and that to the Two Disciples at Emmaus; the Ascension; the Descent of the Holy Ghost; and the Final Triumph of the Church. The next engraving is of the first two words of a Psalter [b], probably a few years earlier than the Ms. last described; the initial letters throughout the volume are richly illuminated, and the kalendar is preceded by twenty pages, exhibiting in double compartments the principal events of the Gospel history. The engraving following is from a copy of the Corpus Decretorum of Gratian [c], elegantly written in the hand of the early part of the fourteenth century. The last extract is from a Ms. of the Lives of Saints and Martyrs [d], of the twelfth century.

The fac-similes in the last Plate are taken, the one from the initial page of a Ms. of Columella, Cato and Varro [e], forming a good specimen of Italian penmanship and embellishment about the time of the invention of printing; the other from a Missal [f], executed in England, and presented, as it would seem, in the middle of the fifteenth century, by William Melrethe, Alderman of London, to some church or monastic institution, the name of which does not appear.

De uiuis Regibus.

Primus Rex uiuus;

Compaynouns, ueez ceo ke ieo uoy,
A poy ke ieo ne me deuoy;
De grant pour le quoer me tremble;
Ueez la treis mors ensemble,
Cum il sunt hidous et diuers,

Four large Volumes of Drawings in folio; to the first Volume is prefixed the title,

"Imagines Regum, Consulum, Dictatorum, Magistrum Equitum, Tribuni-Militum consularis potestatis, ab urbe condita usque ad C. Jul. Cæsarem Dictatorem. Parens Patriæ."

The Drawings are enlarged from coins and medals of the Roman Republic, and are executed with great spirit and accuracy; they appear to have been copied for Albert III., Duke of Bavaria, whose portrait is impressed on the binding with this inscription:

"Albertus Dei gratia Comes Palatinus ac utriusque Bavariæ Dux. A.D. 1571."

Vellum, in three volumes folio, ff. 373, 178, and 314, xv. Cent. Each volume is mutilated, many of the illuminated initial letters and paintings having been cut out. Arms, apparently those of France and England quarterly, have been emblazoned in the first leaf of the second volume; the crest, cap of maintenance and helmet still remain. The ostrich feathers of the Prince of Wales with the motto "Pour elle" occur on several parts of the margin. The Ms. has probably belonged to Prince Arthur.

"Les Croniques Dangleterre" de Jehan Froissart, Livres I. II. III.

The language of this Ms. varies, in some parts very considerably, from that of the edition published by Buchon at Paris in 1824. The division into chapters, and the rubrics are also different.

Volume I.

1. The first book of the Chronicles, in 127 chapters, with a table. fol. 1.
   Chapters 47 pt. 48. 49 pt. 101 pt. 102 pt. 106 pt. and 107 pt. are wanting.

2. Additions to the first book, in another hand, apparently part of a different Ms. fol. 358.
   Printed, some at greater length, by Buchon, vol. ii. pp. 498–501 and vol. iii. pp. 1–122, as chapt. 329 and Additions i–xix.

3. Continuation of the Additions to the first book, in the same hand as the body of the Ms.
   Printed by Buchon, vol. iii. pp. 122–161, as Additions xx–xxii and chap. 343. In Buchon's edition book i. is divided into 696 chapters.

Volume II. The second book of the Chronicles.

Volume III. The third book of the Chronicles.

Vellum, in folio, ff. 57, xv. Cent.

A piece in prose and verse, intitled "Le liure de félicité de vie", dedicated to Charles Conte de Charolois, by Charles Soillot, Secretary to the Duke of Burgundy.

The presentation copy, as is evident from the first illumination, in which the author is represented offering his book to the Count. At fol. 9 is inserted a most richly illuminated leaf of a Gradual, which, from a memorandum on the verso, and the arms of Burgundy impaled with those of France and England appearing upon it, may be presumed to have belonged to a volume given to the Grey Friars of Greenwich by Margaret of York, Duchess of Burgundy.

Paper, small 4to., ff. 226, XVI. Cent.

A collection of Scottish poetry and prose by various authors; as follows,

1. "The tabill of Confessioun, compilit be M. William Dunber," in 21 eight-line stanzas. fol. 1.
   Another copy, wanting a stanza, is contained in the Bannatyne Ms. fol. 17. b.

2. "The passioun of Crist, compilit be M. Walter Kennedy", in stanzas of eight lines. A woodcut, representing the scourging of our Saviour, is prefixed. fol. 6.
   The prologue, consisting of ten stanzas, commences
   "Haill Cristin knyght, haill etern confortour, Haill Riall king, in trone celistiall."
   The poem begins thus,
   "God of his grace and gudnes infinit,
   Sa nobill maid the man his creatour."

In the body of the poem we find the Conversation between the Virgin and the Cross, which proceeds much in the same manner as in the early English poem in Ms. Reg. 18 A. x. fol. 8. b.

3. "The contemplacioun of Synnaris, compilit be frer William of Touris of the ordour of the frer minoures;" a poem divided into seven parts, or contemplations, corresponding with the seven days of the week. fol. 47.

Printed in a work also entitled "The Contemplacyon of Synners," 4to. Lond. 1499, where each chapter as given above is preceded by a prose dissertation upon the same subject. Another copy is contained in Ms. Harl. 6919.

4. A series of prayers in rhyme to our Saviour, commonly known by the name of the Fifteen O's. fol. 87.

The first perfect prayer begins,
"O Jhesu of the warld maker
And of it als the gouernour."
The last ends,
"To the quhilk joy and lestand blis
We mot cum quhair all sanctis is."

5. "Ane dewoit exercitioun to be said euer ilk Sonday in the honour of the croun of thorne and pains quhilkis our Salluour Jhesu thollit in hys blist heid." fol. 96. b.
